Studying Business at University

A business-related degree can give you excellent career prospects as you gain a broad range of directly transferrable skills required by many employers. These degrees involve the study of a combination of economics, accounting, entrepreneurship, finance, management, data analysis and leadership. You do not need to have studied Economics at sixth form to apply to study Business, however Maths is a common requirement. Courses often contain elements of placement and work experience which will further enhance your employability.
